TWO MEN FIGHT DUEL TO DEATH WITH PISTOLS

Hillsboro, N. M., Nov. 29.—So small a matter as an alleged social slight has been found to have been the trifling cause which started the family feud by reason of which James B. Taylor and Isaac Futch shot each other to death on Thanksgiving day at Fairview, sixty miles north of this town. According to further details of the double killing received here the neglect of Futch to invite Mrs. Taylor to his wedding a year ago when all other neighbors were guests and the refusal to admit Mrs. Taylor when she arrived at the scene of the nuptials engendered the bad blood which finally developed into bitter hatred, culminating in the violent death of two of the best known citizens in the county. Taylor, besides a cattle man, was foreman of the United States Treasury mine, well known for years as a Sierra county old timer and quite popular. Futch, not quite so well known, was nevertheless highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was for many years foreman of the Winston cattle ranch.

The refusal of Futch to have Mrs. Taylor attend his wedding led to gossip and the snub created a sensation in county social circles. High words had frequently passed between the two men and when they met at Fairview on Thanksgiving day both resolved to end the trouble by killing the other.

Both men drew their guns at the same time, Taylor a Colt's heavy forty-five and Futch, an automatic pistol. Horrified bystanders heard the crashing staccato of the two guns being rapidly emptied and saw both men fall, both dying in less than half a minute. Each was wounded twice and Taylor snapped his empty gun twice at his enemy after both were down, in a last desperate fury of revenge.

Taylor was an unsuccessful candidate on the democratic ticket two years ago for the office of probate clerk. He married a Miss Laughlin of Kingston, this county.

Nasal Catarrh quickly yields to treatment by the agreeable, aromatic Ely's Cream Balm. It is received through the nostrils and cleanses and heals the whole surface over which it diffuses itself. Druggists sell the 50c. size. Test it and you are sure to continue the treatment till relieved.

Announcement.—To accommodate those who are partial to the use of atomizers in applying liquids into the nasal passages for catarrhal troubles, the proprietors prepare Cream Balm in Liquid form, which will be known as Ely's Liquid Cream Balm. Price including the spraying tube is 75 cents. Druggists or by mail. The Liquid form embodies the medicinal properties of the solid preparation.

A Real Hero

He Had Never Received Any Encouragement.

"I'm engaged! I'm going to be married! No more bachelor quarters or stag dinners for me!"

"It's almost too good to be true. I'm pretty brave, after all, or I never should have had the courage to propose to Jennie."

"How delightful it is to have the agony over! When I think of my procrastination—"

"It wasn't so hard to propose as I had imagined it would be. I'm glad to discover that I'm brave."

"Many a time I had thought the moment propitious for proposing to her, but I always found my tongue frozen to the roof of my mouth, even though it had been glib enough until one of those unspeakable silences came and the very air seemed charged with a proposal of marriage."

"How I wished she would help me! But now I am glad she isn't that kind. A man ought to do the asking. Jennie, I know would have died rather than lead me on."

"Yet our conversation somehow often got around to matrimony. Jennie seemed to think it the right thing for a man to marry."

"True happiness is only for those who are married," Jennie would say.

"Now's my time," I would think. Then my jaws would become set, as if they were paralyzed. Being certain that a perfect girl like Jennie never would accept me for a husband, I felt it would be only a case of making myself ridiculous if I should ask her."

"Of course I should hate to see you marry," she said one evening. "You are such a dear friend to us all that it would be almost like losing one of the family."

"Let me be one of the family!" I blurted out. "Let me to a brother."

"Why did I speak that final word? I didn't mean to, but she couldn't know that."

"Certainly, if you like," she answered, rather frostily, I thought. Doubtless she felt that I was presumptuous. I shriveled with despair."

"However, I nerved myself for one final effort, as a doomed man risks his all on a last desperate struggle."

"Can I ask a brother hold your hand?" I asked her. I was perspiring at every pore from sheer agony.

"Some one else's brother might—if I cared for him," was all she said.

"Her words mystified me greatly. I was at a loss what to say next. The conversation dropped. I couldn't think of a single idea. If she only had given me the slightest hint of encouragement how I should have jumped at it! But Jennie is not that kind."

"It's getting late," I said at last. "I'd better be going."

"How I wished I could have kicked myself down the steps."

"But it's all over now! Actually, I don't even know how I did it. Jennie says it turned out all right because I was so brave. I think so myself. 'Intrepid' is the word Jennie used. That's a fine word; still, I'm afraid Jennie values me above my merits."

"I vowed weeks ago that another year should not end without my knowing whether Jennie would marry me or not."

"That brought a brilliant idea into my head. I would buy her a ring for Christmas and just offer it to her in a general way. If she put it on her third finger I would speak. If she didn't—well, then I should laugh a hollow, mischievous laugh and broken-heartedly wish her a merry Christmas."

"So I went to the jeweler. Even there, however, my courage nearly failed me. Some women were standing near the ring counter. I didn't dare look at them or ask for rings."

"I walked along to the scarf pins and bought some, though I didn't want them. Still those women hung around the rings. It was very provoking. I bought more scarf pins. I began to feel as if I were going to start a pawnshop."

"Suddenly some one slapped me on the back, and the brother of Jennie's girl chum said: 'Hello, Dick! Did you come to buy the engagement ring? My congratulations!'"

"I—I—was all I could stammer out. I was so surprised."

"There's no use denying it," he insisted. "Jennie told my sister herself. When is it to be?"

"I'm not—I began. Then suddenly I became as bold as a lion. 'The first of the year,' I said. 'I'm buying the ring now.'"

"I natter myself that I can rise to an emergency."

"I felt that those women at the ring counter were listening, though I did not look at them. However, I did not care any longer."

"Engagement rings," I said to the clerk, in a loud tone. "You may as well show me plain gold rings, too."

"Do you—do you want me to try them on, Dick?" asked the dearest voice in the world. "I've been here ever so long looking at some pretty ones—if they are not too expensive."

"Jennie and her girl chum! How fortunate!"

"Nothing is too good for you, Jennie," I said at once. "I'm awfully glad I'm brave and quick to seize an opportunity."

"A girl is certainly a great help in selecting rings. Jennie knew just what she wanted. O, I'm in big luck!"

A Proof of It.

"Girls certainly can be contrary." "I should say so. There's Miss Pryor. She knows how to give a positive negative."—Baltimore American.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

There was a partial eclipse last Saturday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. when the stars were defeated by the moons by the close score of 17 to 16. These two teams are very evenly matched as the game played a week ago resulted in the defeat of the Moons by the score of 19 to 18. The games played both times have been almost faultless.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S NOTES

The meeting of the Young People's society at the Presbyterian church last night, though small was one of the most pleasant meetings, in some respects, held for some time. "Allens or Americans," Chapter IV, a character study of the different immigrants coming to our shores, was very well reviewed by the leader, Harry Palmer.

The social held last Tuesday was a very pleasant one as everyone present seemed to more than enjoy themselves. The happy gathering broke up about 11 o'clock.

Next Sunday is consecration meeting at which all who are members are expected to be present.
